

DIRECTORY OF AUDIOVISUAL COLLECTIONS IN WEST MIDLANDS

The following listings have been compiled by Julia Letts for the MLA West Midlands from the ‘Mapping Oral History Collections/ Project in West Midlands’ survey, together with information from reports, websites and databases. This is not a comprehensive account of audiovisual collections in the region: it is a snapshot which provides an indication of the scale and diversity of the subject area.

Living Museum (1) Tipton Road, Dudley, DY1 4SQ	unifying name but mainly comprises recordings made in the course of research into particular buildings, like our ‘oddwork’ forge, or trades, like sweet or bread making. They were often intended to help curators recreate interiors, so they are often taken up with matters of layout, and fixtures and fittings; working practices are also covered, for example, how animals were slaughtered, or how a particular forging was made; many tapes are also taken up with relationships in a particular workplace.	recordings, containing 110 separate interviews, mostly on ferric cassettes. Of regional importance.	staff dedicated to making the archives accessible, though we do our best to respond to requests from researchers, teachers etc. Listening facilities are basic, and we don’t have any means – i.e. tape to tape - of making ‘access’ copies from our originals. Access is also made more difficult by the lack of transcriptions or content analyses, meaning that users – internal or external – can be faced with quite a long trawl.	The Women Chainmakers’ Institute (due for completion late 2007), comprising memories of the building and/or reminiscences of local women trade unionists. 2. Use of tapes for interpretation, in motion-activated ‘talking labels’, planned for near future. 3.
